

From the practice for the practice

The anxious patient

by Dr. Konrad Werthmann

Anxiety is a problem that we come across frequently in general practice. It would appear to be important that in its pathology, fear can be classified into those symptoms which can be attributed to Mucor racemosus and those which can be attributed to Aspergillus niger.

The symptoms are always an opportunity to discharge the unconscious potential for fear somatically, i.e. to neutralise it. Often, a guilty conscience also indicates an unconscious potential for fear.

The symptoms from the Aspergillus niger sector mostly include symptoms from the tuberculinic organic system, i.e. from the area of the gut (constipation, diarrhoea), the respiratory organs (increase in the rate of respiration, sudden onset of asthma-like breathing), the skin (sweats, tingling, itching) and the genito-urinary tract (urinary retention, loss of libido, an excess or lack of drive).

The Mucor anxiety symptoms are mostly expressed as heart problems, fear, and concern about loved ones or about the progress of children, etc. They are more of an anxiety of the heart.
